I worked in private health sectors/startup companies during the last eight years. I collaborated with medical teams and took care of many satisfied patients. I am also employed in an international environment.

I am a highly passionate individual who always seeking new challenges. The transition from medicine to technology was a big adventure, but at the same time, it was incredibly interesting.

I discovered that the skills I learned in medical school, such as critical thinking, problem-solving, communication, collaboration, and multitasking, were transferable and essential for success in my new career.

I started by taking the online courses offered by Cubix Institute of Technology. I expected the essential skills for modern web development, including advanced CSS, asynchronous programming, and WebComponents. From there, I continued to learn other technologies and deepened my knowledge through self-study.

My initial years of studying in the developing industry pushed me to go further in discovering more things in it. I am motivated to join a group of seasoned and experienced developers in the industry respectively.

Best Regards,
